SOCIAL SCANDAL.

Rumors of one of the most sensaional social scandals in many years have just reached London from Capeown, South Africa.

of a youthful millionaire bache.or duke M. Ruben & Sons, with the wife of an officer in command of a crack cavalry regiment. They are now journeying to England on a Cape

The lady in the case is a member of English smart society. She is good-looking, very stylish and about thirty-five years of age.

The ducal swain is many years her junior, and it was understood that he was sent to South Africa to keep him from marrying the daughter of a fa-mous fashionable beauty. With his wealth and position, his family looked for a future royal union. The affair with the cavalry officer's wife is regarded as accounting for the duke's engagement, recently published by au-thority of the young lady's mother, who only a couple of months ago sustained a severe blow in an ill-assorted union contracted by another of her

The young duke's inamorata went to South Africa shortly after the out-break of the war, and her conduct there has been a fruitful topic of gossip. She was a leader of the coterie of fashionable women whose heat le s ayet, during the time of the worst disasters provoked bitter condemnation by the authorities. She organized picinics in the wake of General Methuen's force to witness the battles from a safe distance and see the wounded brought down. Among the gentlemen's names con-nected with hers by the gossips were the brother of a world famous South African magnate and the duke.

The duke's family are concerting measures to nip the scandal in the bud on their arrival in London. The Prince of Wales is advising with them. But the duke's infatuation is said to be perfectly wild, and the lady, is is stated, ru'e him absolutely.
